DO NOT FORGET THEM.

In the crowded streets of the east and west side, from the slums around the cool men and women, who are weakly and pining.

Do not forget them. In dingy, stale rooms, where the thin glimmer of sunshine only warms the poisome odors into more fetid aggressiveness and quickens the lurking germs of ousands of pallid children, all of them ill-fed and imperfectly developed, and with the pains of infantile aikments.

Do not forgot them. thirstily draining from the breast of s heated, tired mother nature's nourishment are numbers of wretched babies, the burden of life's sorrows weighing on the narrow shoulders. Do not forget them.

No, strong men with hearts, sweet wo these poor sick waifs of humanity, because you are good and they are weak

Do not forget them. SHAME!

One of New York's most prominen vogue, has for two or three years elected as subjects for his composition the charming bits of natural beauty which abound in Prospect Park. An American artist, he selected these strictly American subjects, and they were bought eagerly by Americans noble

FOOR BEATTIE.

The ladies are on Mr. BEATTIE's tracks. Their Health Protective Association has given the tidy Commissioner just ten days in which to hump himself and gather garbage by night. If he doesn't, then they are going right down to Mayor GRANT and tell him all about it and ask him to poke Mr. BEATTIE with a sharp

We do want clean streets, and BEATTIE ought to clean them, but he is to be pitted when even woman, lovely woman, re proaches him with dirty streets.

The steam pipe has again come to the fore. The saving that lightning does not strike twice in the same place is not true about steam-pipe explosions, for this is also at Fulton street, where the late explosion occurred. A neighboring cellar was filled with sand, a lot of tobacco ruined, and much damage wrought in business houses in the neighborhood. It is about time that this sort of piping should be piped out.

The streets are being ripped up again. A New Yorker ought to be forgiven alight profanity more readily than au other native of this city. He cannot walk the streets without being assailed by foul smalls and obstructed by big ditches in the highways.

There is no need to be alarmed by cholera paragraphs, but there is every need to be solicitous over the beastly filthiness of many quarters of this town. If the cholera were to come it could hardly strike vicher soil for rapid destructive growth than this.

Seen in Various Churches.

Every Penny Will Bring Joy to a Neil Nelson Describes the Several Styles of Devotees.

Every Church Has Its Distinctive Type of Beauty.

Go to church if you want to see the beauty of New York. I don't mean by that the orchids of society, the delicate rosebuds of fashion or even the hybrids that bloom and blossom in the liquid glories of the electric lights; but that sweet, fresh, matchless beauty that makes the eyes rapacious and the heart glad. Notwithstanding the crowded boats that steam up the Hudson and down the bay, the multitudes that go to the Park a Vienus correspondent, the bride is to edly due to the atmospheric condition of the and the detachments of happy-go-luckies who fish, flirt, ride, drive, sail and hunt on Sunday, New York is a pious city, and there is no better field of observation for the study of beauty than her temples of worship, her synagogues, chapels and cathedrals afford.

Oddly enough, the church girls are as adically different as the preachers and creeds, and oftentimes a better attraction than either.

Any old-timer will tell you that St. George's, in Stuyvesant square, is famous or its pretty girls, and to save his immor tal soul he can't guess the name of the rector.

The sweet creatures who worship at this sbrine are of that dainty, natty, Frenchy sort who seem to have been modelled after the coquettes of the First Empire. As a class they are slim little women who, instead of walking as other women do, seem to dart forth like zephyrs, with lightness and grace that suggests the "steps of inspiration" peculiar to the gavotte.

They run to tidy French coats: to shadow hats, on which the buds seem getting ready to burst into blossom; to long shoes, faint, sweet perfumes, dresses of neutral tint touched up with silver braid and the greatest abundance of little gewgaws in the shape of bangles, girdles, vinaigrettes, alms boxes and chatelaines imaginable.

Their gloves may not match their toilets, but they are sure to fit, and they can be relied on to have the latest thing in coiffures and the newest designs in prayer books.

They know the subtle effect of swee odors on the senses and memories of men. and the violet, jasmine, lilac, lily of the valley and mignonette alternate in perfuming their presence—not in a mass, but from a single spray that is allowed to fade patriotism; not novels, but literature. and die away in fragrance in the bosom of a lamb cape, the lapel of a Louis XIV.

coat or the belt of a prim little Josephine. And, oh, they are so very, very pretty. To sit in a slip and look at their tinted cheeks-not the kind associated with straw blonde hair and Hading veils-the delicately modelled heads, little ears, white teeth, shy blue and modest brown eyes is to forget choir, creed, priest and prayer, Prayer-book and hymnal are useless to the sinner and saint alike, whose love of Miss Inswim—Do you admire Browning. Mr. Doughenhead?

Young Doughenhead—Well, the fact is Miss Inswim, at the risk of being considered ignorant. I must confess that I don't appreciate him at all.
Hiss Inswim.—E.m.m.in, do you consider the risk very great. Mr. Doughenhead I
